

*Please note, the historical account below is theoretical, anecdotal, and purely subjective, recounted after entirely too much whiskey.

This magisterial life-sized gingerbread distillery was designed as a monument to the late General Hooch Poteen, founding Father of American whiskey-making. Hooch arrived on this continent with a deep love for alcohol in almost any shape or form which led to a chain of events that would culminate in the creation of his very own whiskey distillery deep in the Smoky Mountains of Tennessee. Mr. White Lightning, as they once called him, created distinctively American bourbons, ryes, and Tennessee whiskeys whose versions today, are savored by connoisseurs, sipped by grandmothers, tossed back by debauchees, and discovered by almost every American as they reach the wondrous age of twenty-one.

Decades after his death, the General's historic distillery was discovered with his own personal monument not far from the structure itself with a headstone that read:

Here lies Hooch Poteen.

He drank to your health in company, he drank to your health alone, he drank to your health so many times, he ruined his own.

Here stands the recreation of his Smoky Mountain distillery; it is a heartfelt commemoration to his talents and to whiskey lovers everywhere.
